My Dear Harold Wynne: The Air Force Academy looks to me as if another factory moved in where it ought not to be. The design will probably be know as Talbott's Aviary or, more realistically, a factory for birdmen. Talbott may be a nice man up in his job, probably so, but that would disqualify him from being a good judge of architects and architecture. The two are incompatible.

I note that the plan-factory magnate who fathered the opus (I see several hands in it) says the chapel needs another year's study. I suggest ten more and then throw it away. When the great art of Architecture comes down to this sort of thing—what is the right name for such violation of nature?

The Sanitary Age will have too much such stupid hostility to Nature to answer for.

Sincerely Yours,

Frank Lloyd Wright
